SPEAK OR DARE

Not Your Typical Public Speaking Event

Event Execution Plan & Concept Document

A high-energy first event designed to make students comfortable with the Public Speaking Club through comedy, improvisation, acting, interaction and controlled chaos.

Format: 60–90 minute interactive campus event

Core principle: Students should leave saying “That was fun,” not “I was forced to give a speech.”

1. Executive Summary

Speak or Dare is designed as the club's first major student-facing event. The first event has an important job: it needs to grab students' attention, make the club feel approachable and create curiosity about what the club will do next.

A conventional first event with formal speeches, introductions or long presentations may immediately make students think, "This is going to be boring." Speak or Dare deliberately breaks that expectation.

The experience is closer to the feeling of a fun podcast or interactive show: people are entertained, they hear different perspectives, they laugh and participate, and they end up developing communication skills without feeling like they are attending a lesson.

The central mechanic is simple: a participant picks a chit and gets either a SPEAK challenge or a DARE.

SPEAK tests spontaneous communication: explaining, persuading, storytelling, defending an opinion and thinking on the spot.

DARE tests confidence and adaptability through acting, imitation, role-play, mime, interaction and absurd situations. Talking may happen, but it is not the task itself.

Recommended tagline: "Pick a chit. Speak... or dare yourself."

2. Why This Idea Works

It is the right tone for a first event. The first event should grab attention rather than feel like another academic session. A playful format gives students an immediate reason to stop, watch and participate.

Students learn without realizing they are learning. Like a good podcast, the experience can be entertaining first while communication skills develop naturally in the background. Students practice confidence, listening, quick thinking, expression and improvisation without being told to "practice public speaking."

It removes the fear of public speaking. A formal speech creates pressure. A funny task gives students something specific to focus on instead of worrying about how they look or sound.

It creates instant entertainment. The audience is curious about what each participant will get and how they will handle it.

It makes the club approachable. The Public Speaking Club becomes associated with confidence, creativity, humour and people skills—not only formal competitions.

It creates natural participation. Students can laugh, guess, react, vote and sometimes become part of a dare.

It builds real communication skills. Speak challenges develop verbal expression; Dares develop improvisation, non-verbal communication, confidence and adaptability.

It is repeatable. New chits can be added for future editions, festivals and themed club meetings.

3. Core Concept

The host opens with: "You never know what is inside the chit."

A participant picks a chit. The host announces Speak or Dare, gives a short preparation window, and the participant performs.

Preparation: 10–20 seconds. Performance: 30–60 seconds.

Important: Dares must be playful, not humiliating. No unsafe, insulting, discriminatory or unwanted-contact challenges.

4. SPEAK vs DARE — The Crucial Difference

SPEAK	DARE
Communication is the main challenge.	The action/performance is the main challenge.
Think → formulate → speak.	Act → improvise → react.
Persuade, explain, defend, tell a story.	Imitate, act, mime, role-play, interact.
Tests verbal expression.	Tests confidence, creativity and spontaneity.

Example: “Convince us that sleeping in class is healthy” = SPEAK. “Imitate a professor from your college taking attendance when half the class is absent” = DARE.

5. Recommended DARE Bank — 36 Ideas

1. Invisible Object: Act with an invisible object while the audience guesses what it is.

2. Teacher Mode: Pick someone and teach them something ridiculously simple, such as how to drink water, with complete seriousness.

3. Professor Imitation: Imitate a professor from your college. Keep it recognizable and respectful.

4. Breaking News: Report a ridiculous event: “Someone stole the last samosa from the canteen.”

5. Movie Scene Swap: Recreate a famous movie scene with the opposite emotion.

6. Wrong Emotion: Perform a normal situation using an absurd emotion.

7. Dubbing Artist: One participant acts silently while you provide their dialogue and sound effects.

8. Alien in College: Act like an alien experiencing college for the first time.

9. Horror Version: Turn losing your phone into a horror-movie scene.

10. Oscar Acceptance: Give an emotional acceptance speech for a ridiculous award.

11. Sports Commentator: Provide dramatic commentary for someone doing something completely ordinary.

12. Canteen Food Critic: Review a normal snack like a world-famous food critic.

13. Conspiracy Theorist: Explain a normal college event as a secret conspiracy.

14. Human Remote: A partner controls you with PLAY, PAUSE, REWIND, FAST-FORWARD and MUTE.

15. Professor–Student Swap: One participant becomes professor and one becomes student; teach a ridiculous topic seriously.

16. Parent–Teacher Meeting: Act out a parent-teacher meeting with an overconfident student defending their attendance.

17. Customer Care Executive: Handle a ridiculous complaint professionally, such as “My roommate stole my blanket.”

18. The Impossible Interview: Interview/be interviewed as an absurd character: talking potato, alien applicant, etc.

19. Bollywood Version: Turn a normal activity such as charging your phone into an emotional Bollywood climax.

20. Baby CEO: Conduct a serious corporate meeting while behaving like a five-year-old CEO.

21. Time Traveller: Act like you are from 2126 and have just arrived at college.

22. College Tour Guide: Give a tourist tour of your college with ridiculous claims.

23. Secret Translator: Translate another person’s normal speech into an invented language.

24. Mirror Challenge: Copy another participant’s movements as accurately as possible.

25. Freeze Frame: Act with another person; when the host says FREEZE, stop and let someone replace an actor.

26. Random Character: Pick a character and situation, e.g. strict principal + ordering pani puri, and act it out.

27. Slow Motion: Perform a normal activity in extreme slow motion while others make sound effects.

28. Invisible Phone Call: Act out a phone call based on a ridiculous situation secretly given by the host.

29. Statue Challenge: Hold a ridiculous pose while others try to make you laugh without touching you.

30. Advertisement Battle: Sell a random object like it is a ■10 lakh luxury product.

31. Wrong Answers Only: Answer five easy questions confidently but incorrectly.

32. NPC Mode: Behave like a video-game NPC while another participant tries to interact with you.

33. Emotion Roulette: Pick an emotion and react to a completely normal situation using only that emotion.

34. Runway Model: Walk like a fashion-model runway while carrying an absurd everyday object.

35. Last Samosa Fight: Act out a dramatic argument over who gets the last samosa.

36. Random Voice: Perform a normal task using a randomly assigned voice: news anchor, cartoon villain, robot or royal monarch.

6. SPEAK Challenge Bank

1. Convince us that sleeping in class is healthy.

2. Explain Instagram to an alien.

3. Give a TED Talk on Maggi.

4. Defend pineapple on pizza.

5. Convince the audience that Monday should be cancelled.

6. Sell your water bottle for ■10,000.

7. Explain why college students should have a four-day week.

8. Tell a funny story using three random words.

9. Defend a ridiculous opinion chosen by the host.

10. Explain a simple object as a revolutionary invention.

11. Give advice to a first-year student using only three rules.

12. Convince the audience that procrastination is a skill.

13. Describe your college using only movie titles.

14. Tell a story beginning with “I knew I was in trouble when…”

15. Pitch a completely imaginary startup in one minute.

7. Recommended 90-Minute Event Flow

Time	Segment	Execution
0–10 min	Warm-up	Host welcomes everyone, explains the concept and runs 2–3 tiny audience interactions.
10–15 min	Demo	Two club members perform one Speak and one Dare to demonstrate the difference.
15–55 min	Main Rounds	Participants pick chits. Keep the pace fast and use audience reactions/voting.
55–70 min	Chaos Round	Use high-energy dares such as Professor Imitation, Movie Scene Swap, Human Remote, Breaking News, etc.
70–80 min	Audience Choice	Audience votes for the most entertaining participant.
80–90 min	Awards + Photo	Give fun titles, take a group photo and invite students to future club activities.

8. Organizing Team & Responsibilities

• Host/Anchor: Energy, instructions, reactions and timing.

• Chit Manager: Maintains Speak/Dare boxes and checks appropriateness.

• Audience Manager: Volunteers, movement and crowd energy.

• Media/Design: Photos, reels, poster and final group photo.

9. Materials & Setup

• Two labelled boxes: SPEAK and DARE.

• Printed, cut and folded chits.

• Timer/phone stopwatch.

• Microphone/speaker if needed.

• Small open performance area.

• Fun certificates/prizes.

• Party poppers for especially good Speak answers or Dare performances.

• Chocolates as instant appreciation for particularly good answers, acting or participation.

• Phone/camera for reels and photos.

10. Awards — Audience Choice

Instead of making the awards purely judge-selected, let the students themselves decide who deserves certain awards. This keeps the audience involved until the end and makes the awards feel personal and fun.

• ■ Certified Yapper

• ■■ Smooth Talker

• ■ Fearless Participant

• ❤■ Audience Favourite

• ■ Quickest Thinker

• ■ Funniest Moment

• ■ Best Speak

• ■ Best Dare

How it works: At the end, the host announces each award and asks the audience to nominate/vote for the participant they think deserves it. The club team can handle the final count quickly by show of hands or a simple live vote.

11. Rules & Boundaries

• No physical danger, forced touching, harassment or humiliation.

• No jokes targeting sensitive personal characteristics.

• Professor imitation must remain playful and respectful.

• Allow a participant to skip a chit if genuinely uncomfortable.

• Do not force another student into a dare.

• Laugh at the situation, not at a participant’s identity.

12. Success Metrics

• Attendance compared with normal club events.

• Number of spontaneous volunteers.

• Audience reaction and participation.

• Students asking about future club activities.

• Feedback on whether public speaking felt less intimidating.

• Social-media engagement: shares, tags, reels and comments.

Most important success indicator: students who were initially sitting in the audience should feel comfortable enough to participate by the second half.

13. Master Execution Checklist

■ Finalize name, date, venue and duration.

■ Create 30–40 Speak chits.

■ Create 40–50 Dare chits.

■ Review every Dare for safety and appropriateness.

■ Print, cut and fold chits.

■ Rehearse with club members.

■ Prepare 2–3 demo performances.

■ Arrange microphone/speaker if needed.

■ Prepare awards/certificates.

■ Create promotional poster and social-media content.

■ Recruit volunteers for crowd management.

■ Capture photos/videos.

■ Collect quick feedback.

■ Post highlights and announce the next club activity.

14. Final Recommendation

For the club's first event, the biggest objective should not be to demonstrate how good the club is at public speaking. The objective should be to make students want to come back.

Speak or Dare turns public speaking into a game. Speak challenges build verbal confidence; Dare challenges create the funny, unpredictable moments that make the event memorable and different from a conventional speaking competition.

The first event should feel like an entertaining interactive show—similar to the energy of a good podcast—where students laugh, participate, hear different personalities and gradually become more confident without realizing that they are practicing communication.

Keep the event fast, informal and unpredictable. Use club members in the first few rounds, let the audience become part of the action, and make the Dares visually different from the Speak challenges.

"Come for the chaos. Leave with confidence."
